Great Counterfeiter Released From Prison Today.

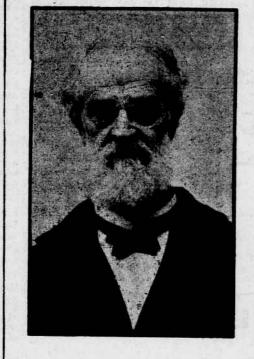

HIS CRIMINAL CAREER

GOVERNMENT NOTES AND BONDS FORGED UNDER HIS DIRECTION.

Has Been Engaged in the Business From Early Life-Now an Old Man of Eighty-Three.

The cleverest and greatest counterfeiter the world ever knew, the man who bothered than any criminal in the history of the country, is a free man, at liberty to resume his profession, if he desires. But he is probably too old to ever undertake to.make counterfeits of United States securities again. William E. Brockway is eighty-three years old, with hair as white as the snows of winter.

The famous counterfeiter was released today from the New Jersey state prison at Trenton, and he went out into the world to renew acqaintances and to see how it feels to be old, practically helpless, and to be cast upon the world with the brand of the criminal stamped all over. Brockway's past has always been a mystery to the secret service detectives, and his record in the secret service office here contains little about who he was or what are his connections. All that is known is that Brockway denied that he had kith or kin, and that what he said must have been true. Despite the fact that the detectives succeeded in landing him in prison, it is admitted that good luck was with them throughout, and that the unraveling of the schemes of Brockway were accomplished almost by accident.

Brockway's Career.

Brockway, or "Col. E. W. Spencer," as he was known among his friends, was a successful counterfeiter during the last years of the civil war, but the government failed to make a case against him until March 7, 1896, when he was convicted in New Jersey of making counterfeit $500 gold certificates and $100 Canadian notes. Samples of Brockway's work on these securities, hanging in a frame in the office of the chief of the secret service, show that they were so deceptive that, as stated, experts differed widely concerning their genuineness. Fortunately none of them got into circulation except the Canadian certificates.

Brockway took no interest in making counterfeits of small denominations. He always said that he did not want to swindle the poor. He was after the rich. Bonds and large hills were his specialties. Way back in the late 60's he made a spurious 7-30 $1,000 United States bond that was so much like the genuine that it has always been claimed that the Treasury Department redeemed some of them as genuine and then sued afterward for the recovery of the money. The subject is a tender one with treasury officials, who will not admit the accuracy of the published statements, but there is authority for the belief that the Uffited States treasury did redeem about seventy-five of these bonds from a brokerage establishment in Washington that went out of business years ago. Suit was afterward brought to recover the money paid for their redemption, but was not successful. The defense was that the bonds were bought as genuine and were be-lieved to be genuine; in fact, were genuine. The government knew that there had been counterfeits somewhere, as duplicate bonds of the same number were discovered. How many of these bonds were ever put on the market not even the secret service knows. The late Col. Wm. P. Wood, who was at that time chief of the secret service, claimed a large reward on the ground that he recovered the original plates, but the evidence of Mr. Geo. W. Casilear, the then chief of the engraving division of the bureau of engraving and printing, proved that the plates were forgeries, and the claim was disallowed.

$1,000 Six Per Cent Bonds.

He was never even arrested for doing the work, as there was no evidence that he was guilty. His success, however, caused him a ew years later to begin work on another $1,000 United States bond, that time a 6 per cent security. His experience with that bond shows the bad luck in which he that bond shows the bad luck in which he played throughout his years of counterfeiting. This bond was turned out in 1880, but between 1870 and 1880 Brockway had counterfeited a $500 legal tender note, which was detected soon after being put in circulation, and for which Brockway could not be connected, although officers were certain that he was the promoter. tain that he was the promoter.

It was in 1879 that a dangerous $100 na.

tional bank note made its appearance in New York. Secret service men in several squads were put to work to run down the counterfeiters. It was too dangerous a note to get into circulation. Brockway had then been for years under suspicion in connection with various counterfeits and his every movement was closely watched. One day James B. Doyle of Chicago was seen to visit Brockway. He was a stranger to the secret service men, but they concluded to watch him. After he had several conferences with Brockway he took a train for Chicago Secret service men were on the same train, and they felt sure Doyle was taking away with him a large batch of the $100 national with him a large batch of the $100 national bank notes to put in circulation. They telegraphed the Chicago agents to have a warrant made out for Doyle on any charge on which he could be held. When he reached Chicago he was arrested. Packed in some old clothes in his valise were 208 $1,000 coupon 6 per cent bonds, the best counterfeits ever seen by the officers. The surprise to them was complete. Doyle had been given the bonds to hypothecate in Chicago. Although positive that Brockway had been the father of this latest counterfeit, the secret service officers were unable to prove it. They managed to get some kind of a confession out of Brockway, however, and made an agreement with him that if he knew something about him, "held some-thing over him," as it is put, and he forced Smith to utilize his talent in violating the law. Smith is believed to have engraved every bond and note that Brockway had made up to the time of their arrest. This man, who came from a good family in Brocklyn, died years ago. He was never sent to prison as it was an his testiment. sent to prison, as it was on his testimony that sufficient facts were secured to frighten Brockway.

Smith engraved the plates in sections, was that if officers ever surprised him when beginning his counterfeits they would not find a whole plate. When the sections of a bill or bond were complete Brockway's tal-ent came in. He had a secret process for transferring or assembling all the parts on a steel or copper plate. He could not en-grave anything himself, but his process of grave anything himself. but his process of assembling was one which has never been discovered and which remains in his own mind. Smith never worked in the bureau of engraving and printing of the treasury, as has been charged, but he had been employed by the bureau to do work at his home. In this connection it is a matter of history in the secret service bureau that no man in the secret service bureau that no man who ever worked for the government as an engraver or workman in the engraving bureau ever made a counterfeit. No former employee of the government was ever arrested for such an offense.

Brockway's Terms in Prison.

Brockway served his first term in prison for counterfeiting bonds of the Morris and Essex railroad of New York. He was arrested in 1885 for this offense by the state authorities of New York, and the crime was proven. He was sentenced to a term in Sing Sing, which he completed. It was while serving in Sing Sing that he hatched the plot for making the counterfeits that afterward landed him in Trenton prison. He became acquainted with Dr. Bradford, a New York dentist, who was serving a sentence for abortion, and with James Courtney, another convict. Bradford had money, and when all had been released from Sing Sing and were ready to begin work Bradford supplied the cash for the enterprise. They rented a house in West Hoboken in 1895. Who engraved the plates for the $500 gold certificates and the Canadian notes has never become known sufficiently to be proved, but it is pretty well known that it was a person closely conrested in 1885 for this offense by the state known that it was a person closely connected with Smith. The three conspirators expected to make a fortune. They installed a woman named Abbie Smith as a house-

HER MIND UNSETTLED.

Claim Made in Behalf of Woman Accused of Shoplifting.

Mrs. Jennie Brooks, thirty-seven years old, appeared in Judge Scott's branch of the Police Court today to answer to two charges of theft. She was in a very nervous condition, and between sobs she declared, apparently with great effort, that she was not guilty of either of the charges. Precinct Detective Grant reported to the ccurt that the woman was taken into custedy yesterday afternoon in a down-town department store on a charge of shoplifting, and when searched at the house of detention goods taken from another store were also found in her possession. The total value of goods from the two stores

When arrested Mrs. Brooks gave her name as Jennie Smith, but declined to make any further statement concerning her identity, and it was only after considerable difficulty that it was learned her name was Brooks, and that she resided with her husband, John Brooks, at 1239 4th street southeast. He appeared in court today and informed Judge Scott that his wife was not responsible for her actions she having responsible for her actions, she having acted strangely since the death of her father, two years ago. He said she had a bank account of $9,000, and was always under the impression that somebody was trying to get possession of her money. He asked that further hearing of the case be postponed in order that he could have his family physician, who was aware of his wife's condition, to appear in court as a Judge Scott granted the request, and di-rected that Mrs. Brooks should remain at the house of detention until tomorrow.

fession out of Brockway, however, and made an agreement with him that if he would plead guilty his sentence would be suspended. He did this, and in the mean time managed to dispose of the plates of the national bank notes, thereby stopping their circulation. His arrest and narrow escape took his nerve, and for a time he gave the service no further trouble.

Brockway's Engraver.

Brockway's entire outfit in the turning out of the bank notes and the bonds were captured and destroyed much to the relief of the government. Arrested with Brock way at the same time was Charles Smith, the man who really did all the engraving for the extraordinary counterfelts. Smith, the man who really did all the engraving for the extraordinary counterfelts. Smith was a splendid engraver employed by a bank note company in New York.
